As a QC Inspector I would take patient CAD models from our customer and then program them for CMM inspection on a Zeiss CMM, thus making sure that our product was in tolerance to our customer's required specifications. There was also time devoted each month for inspecting calibration trees that the SLA machines made for use in SLA calibrations.

It was here that I was a QC Inspector and a shipping and receiving clerk. This was a typical job shop that produced products for the aerospace, medical, communication and computer industries. This is where I used such equipment as a Zeiss CMM smart scope, optical comparator and other high-tech measuring devices for inspecting tight tolerance dimensions under an ISO environment.
